

Gas Chromatography

There can be many parts to a gas chromatography system but the basic components include:

An injection system.
A column (controllable oven)
A detector.

Gas chromatography can be used for the analysis of most environmental samples.

GC is a very efficient technique, (has very low plate heights 'H') and with environmental samples being complex this has obvious advantages.

Many pollutants are volatile such as pesticides and PCB's and can be turned into gaseous form easily, others such as PAH's are analysed with some additional sample preparation.
