Participation in Infrastructure Projects in the Republic of Korea Paul Nomba Um, Severine Dinghem, 2005 In the aftermath of the 1997 East Asian financial crisis the government of the Republic of Korea published a Private Participation in Infrastructure PPI Act to remove the main impediments to private investment in infrastructure sectors The implementation of the Act was followed by a steady increase in the number of PPI projects thus spurring the modernization of the main infrastructure facilities in transport water electricity and telecommunications Despite this progress the Korean PPI market still faces critical challenges that are probably related to its nascent stage of development The market is dominated by five construction and engineering firms but lacks world class project developers At the same time the procurement of PPI projects takes on average four years and competition in tenders is limited The number of unsolicited proposals is abnormally high whereas the number of solicited proposals remains flat The participation of foreign firms is very limited despite the size of the market and the number of projects awarded Although local financing is available the maturity of financing instruments does not exceed five years for most corporate papers and 10 years for government bonds This paper reviews the procurement of PPI projects in Korea and benchmarks it to international best practices before proposing options for its improvement Construction Research Journal, 2007 Infrastructure for the Built Environment Rodney

Howes, Herbert Robinson, 2005 Throughout the world there is a growing demand for high quality public services to support socio economic development Infrastructure is central to improving the level of public services and the quality of the built environment But in key areas such as transport energy water healthcare education and communications public resources are not sufficient to keep pace with this demand As the public sector struggles to keep up the private sector is increasingly involved in the procurement of economic and social infrastructure Until now procurement strategies have often concentrated on the mechanisms and the bricks and mortar without a thorough analysis of the processes and their implications for services The result is that all too often infrastructure projects are implemented in an ad hoc and fragmented way In this ground breaking book Rodney Howes and Herbert Robinson provide a holistic approach to infrastructure provision that facilitates infrastructure delivery aimed at continuously improving the level and quality of services Critical issues of policy and strategy implementation and operational aspects are examined within the context of sustainability By emphasising the importance of procuring infrastructure within an overall national or regional development policy and strategy the authors have demonstrated the importance of linking investment and resource decisions to local social economic and environmental needs With each chapter carefully written to reflect part of the infrastructure delivery chain and illustrated with practical examples and case studies from around the world this book offers a new blueprint for infrastructure investment and resource management Innovative Project Delivery Methods for Infrastructure Pekka Pakkala, 2002 Infrastructure
