Sentencing As A Human Process:

Sentencing as a Human Process John Hogarth, 1971-12-15 Sentencing is not a neutral or mechanical act it is a human process highly charged affectively and motivationally Sentencing decisions take place in a social environment of laws facts ideas and people This study of sentencing behaviour is primarily concerned with the mental processes involved in decision making It is based on intensive interviews and on measures of the information processing ability of seventy one full time judges in Ontario The work covers such topics as problems of sentencing particularly existing disparities social and economic background of judges and their varying penal philosophies the nature and measurement of judicial attitudes toward crime punishment and related issues prediction of sentencing behaviour based on attitude scales which the author has constructed and also on fact patterns perceived by judges and the impact of social and legal constraints on the sentencing process The study concludes that there exists a very high correlation between a judges definition of situation and the sentence which he imposes and that while sentences meted out for a particular law violation under similar circumstances may differ among judges judges are highly consistent within themselves Using these conclusions the author constructs a model of judicial behaviour and shows how this model can be used to predict and to explain sentencing and breaks new ground in the use of the social and behavioural sciences as sources of data to explain the sentencing process

The Trial Process Bruce Dennis Sales, 2013-11-11 As noted in the Preface to Volume 1 in this series the goal of Perspectives in Law and Psychology is to provide a forum for books aimed at systematically interfacing the two disciplines Toward this end Volume 1 presented a collection of original writings focused on the criminal justice system that grew out of a conference held at the University of Nebraska at Lincoln Because that volume was based on conference proceedings however an attempt was not made to provide thorough coverage of all law psychology issues in the criminal justice system rather it highlighted a select few issues that were currently being investigated by some of the outstanding people in the field This volume differs substantially from the first in that it attempts to bring together those psycholegal scholars who are doing the major research on the trial process today and provides broad coverage of critical research on the trial Thus the chapters not only provide an extensive review of existing literature in this field but also present new contributions by these scholars
