this point has not been easy she is totally unprepared for the news of the death by suicide of her son Todd who was battling cocaine addiction She feels her emotions must be stifled to a large extent because of the responsibility she carries of tending her terminally ill husband For the two years between the death of her son and the death of her husband she begins her grief work She seeks relief from the guilt and anger as well as shame and rejection associated with suicide At the same time she is dealing with anger at her husband for being seriously ill and unable to offer her comfort or help with her grief work She learns that irrational feelings are a part of grief While she is working to recover from the loss of her son she feels that she dare not give in to her grief as she faces the imminent death of her husband As Bob enters hospice care Roberta becomes his caregiver In the last four months of his life he requires constant care giving the couple a special time together to iron out differences forgive and be forgiven She says Caring for Bob in his last days was the most loving things I have ever had the opportunity to do A few months after Bobs death Lee also dies following a lingering illness While their marriage was short they had remained friends and his death was another serious loss Since she is an ex wife who had remarried she is a disenfranchised griever Different emotions are associated with each of these losses Death by suicide leaves survivors in shock feeling rejection anger guilt and shame In the case of death from cancer there is a feeling of relief that suffering has ended yet there is a deep sadness and a feeling of exhaustion Disenfranchised grief is a sense of loss not normally recognized as legitimate grief by society For instance an ex spouse a distant relative a pet a homosexual partner etc The grief is real but unrecognized These feelings while often severe are normally untended since they are ignored by society Therefore those who grieve often believe they too should ignore their feelings Stuffing emotions under a mental rug does not make them go away In her grief work Yarbrough discovers that there are unresolved issues surrounding her parents deaths in the mid 1970 She has been unable to return to the home in Texas where she was raised and where her parents had lived until her mothers death in 1972 Everything is different Her parents are gone the house is gone What had always been a safe harbor in the storms of her life is no more nb My Path Through Life Lilli Lehmann,1914 The Theosophical Path Katherine Augusta Westcott Tingley,1920 Paths Through Despair to Gratitude and Faith Anita Pernell-Arnold,2015-02-12 Death is a spiritual and psychological phenomenon that we encounter and from which we know we must suffer and recover Why then are we so traumatized by the loss of a spouse or committed life partner In this illuminating new book Paths Through Despair to Gratitude and Faith author Anita Pernell Arnold describes the process of grieving outlines strategies proven most effective for successful resolutions and provides a detailed curriculum for working with groups of persons who have lost their spouses or life partners Perfect for those in need of guidance through the pain of losing a loved one for practitioners interested in a holistic approach when interacting with clients or for churches funeral homes and healthcare providers wishing to establish support communities this book lights the way Readers will learn to identify issues that those in the throes of grief may encounter take note of the progress made and yet to come and determine the next steps to be addressed Integrating spiritual
