Problems In Neolithic Archaeology:

Problems in Neolithic Archaeology Alasdair Whittle, 1988 Problems in Neolithic Archaeology is a notable contribution to the debate about how we can write prehistory Drawing on both processual and post processual approaches it reaffirms the central role of theory and interpretation while accepting as permanent the uncertainty which makes the testing of archaeological hypotheses difficult or even impossible Dr Whittle asserts in particular the need for greater self confidence and for the formulation of new theory and questions more appropriate to the archaeological record The book s specific strength lies however in a close contextual study of the Neolithic period in western and central Europe In this respect it provides an admirable complement to his textbook Neolithic Europe The Culture Problem in Neolithic Archaeology: Examples and Possible Solutions in the Middle Yangzi River Region Richard Ehrich, 2017 Archaeological cultures have been an essential part of the study of prehistory especially the Neolithic Age since the beginning of the discipline However for a long time now doubts have been raised about their ability to reflect the reality of life in antiquity These Neolithic cultures as they are defined by archaeologists appear to have little semblance to how anthropology or the general public understand the concept of culture This thesis aims to re conceptualize archaeological cultures and demonstrate ways in which these constructs of our modern typology can be made to relate to ancient human behavior I apply these ideas in the archaeology of ancient China where the use of archaeological cultures has gone largely unquestioned and certain prehistoric cultures are ascribed a special significance in the formation of Chinese civilization After tracing the history of the culture concept in anthropology and the archaeologies of America Europe and China I present a new framing of the term based on current ideas about style practice and social boundaries The identification of cultures relies on detecting behaviors that are so ingrained that they are subject to little conscious manipulation and hence dependable signifiers of the cultural environment they were acquired in In terms of Neolithic archaeology the best way of achieving this is by discerning certain behavioral steps in the production of pottery in this case the forming of the vessel rim I give a detailed introduction to a group of Neolithic cultures in the Middle Yangzi River Region in Central China and demonstrate how the traditional culture concept by which they were defined has created problems in interpreting the underlying processes resulting in a long and unresolved debate about their relationship to each other Then I apply my own typology of vessel rims to published material on the one hand and plot my measurements of the rims of vessels in Chinese museum collections on the other hand The emerging patterns hint towards the invention and adoption of the potter s wheel in this time and region as a decisive force of cultural change

Archaeological Theory and Scientific Practice Andrew Jones, 2001-12-06 Is archaeology an art or a science This question has been hotly debated over the last few decades with the rise of archaeological science At the same time archaeologists have seen a change in the intellectual character of their discipline as many writers have adopted approaches influenced by social theory The discipline now encompasses both archaeological scientists and archaeological theorists and discussion regarding the status of archaeology remains polarised In this 2001 book Andrew Jones argues that we need to analyse the practice of archaeology Through an analysis of archaeological practice influenced by recent developments in the field of science studies and with the aid of extensive case studies he develops a new framework which allows the interpretative and methodological components of the discipline to work in tandem His reassessment of the status and character of archaeology will be of interest to students scholars and professionals

The Imperial Network in Ancient China Maxim

Korolkov,2021-11-18 This book examines the emergence of imperial state in East Asia during the period ca 400 BCE 200 CE as a network based process showing how the geography of early interregional contacts south of the Yangzi River informed the directions of Sinitic state expansion Drawing from an extensive collection of sources including transmitted textual records archaeological evidence excavated legal manuscripts and archival documents from Liye this book demonstrates the breadth of human and material resources available to the empire builders of an early imperial network throughout southern East Asia from institutions and infrastructures to the relationships that facilitated circulation This network is shown to have been essential to the consolidation of Sinitic imperial rule in the sub tropical zone south of the Yangzi against formidable environmental epidemiological and logistical odds This is also the first study to explore how the interplay between an imperial network and alternative frameworks of long distance interaction in ancient East Asia shaped the political economic trajectory of the Sinitic world and its involvement in Eurasian globalization Contributing to debates around imperial state formation the applicability of world system models and the comparative study of empires The Imperial Network in Ancient China will be of significant interest to students and scholars of East Asian studies archaeology and history
