

- Dissociative amnesia is generally considered the most common memory problem in dissociative processes. It involves one or more episodes of inability to recall important personal information, usually of a traumatic or stressful nature, that is too extensive to be explained by ordinary forgetfulness. As people use dissociative defenses in trauma, this type of amnesia could be present.
- Confabulation is a memory error defined as the production of fabricated, distorted, or misinterpreted memories without the conscious intention to deceive. People who confabulate present incorrect memories ranging from subtle alterations to bizarre fabrications. They are generally very confident about their recollections, despite contradictory evidence.
- Allomnesia is an illusion of memory, or distorted memories. It is a distorted account of something in the past that really happened, something that the person really perceived or experienced, but it is distorted.
- Pseudomonas, or hallucinations of memories, because it is something that did not happen, was never perceived or experienced. Jamais vu, jamais vecu, jamais entendu, jamais eprouve and déjà vu, déjà vecu, déjà entendu, déjà eprouve phenomena are qualitative changes of memory.
- False memory is a psychological phenomenon where a person recalls something that did not happen or is very different from the way it happened. Great creative imagination and dissociation are known to relate to false memory formation. Creative imagination may lead to vivid details of imagined events. High dissociation may be associated with habitual use of lax response criteria for source decisions due to frequent interruption of attention or consciousness. Social desirability is important in creating false memory.
