Fundamentals of set theory , arithmetic and solving continuum hypothesis

In resolving continuum hypothesis , it is required for me in first addressing axiomatic set theory , since there are mathematicians who proves that this problem is unsolvable within the axiomatic set domain , i shall show that ZFC can be overall constructed from axiom of specification , henceforth , being nothing more than overspecified naive set theory itself . Hence , the result of impossibility in proving continuum hypothesis is null in power and that if naive set theory could prove it , then there is no argument further , otherwise than true .

I have proven that naive set theory is sufficient for existence of mathematical operation and since proven Russell's paradox can be resolved henceforth ZFC can be completely abandoned for naive set theory without causing any disruption in mathematics.

Derivation of ZFC from axiom of specification

Now i shall construct ZFC based on axiom of specification alone , with primary notations from set theoretic language , it is as such , that if ZFC can be if ZFC can be entirely constructed based on axiom of specification alone or with some repeated use of it , then it immediately implies that ZFC are overall , merely dependent on axiom of specification alone , and that reduces ZFC to mere axiom of specification as all other axioms should be removed out of place , due to principle of least axioms , or in simple words , we should not assume that some theory that is build from some axiom to be of equivalent power as base of the theory , or else , consequently , it would inadvertently results in contradiction .

Description of set theory from logic denotations

$\exists S(S$ is an elemental space that contains some elements without repetition in listing without order such that the listing is contained in)

Objects in naive set theory :

A , B , C , \dots for denote of sets ;

$a,b,c \dots$ for primitive elements whose themselves contains no element(s) ;

logic notation in naive set theory :

definition of belonging of a set relation

$\exists e(s \in S \Leftrightarrow s \text{ is an element contained in the set } S)$
