

INTERVIEWER. Peter Hall, who has directed many of your plays, says that they rely on precise verbal form and rhythm, and when you write "pause" it means something other than "silence," and three dots are different from a full stop. Is his sensitivity to this kind of writing responsible for your working well together?

FENTER. Yes, it is, very much so. I do pay great attention to those points you just mentioned. Hall once held a dot and pause rehearsal for the actors in The Homecoming. Although it sounds bloody pretentious it was apparently very valuable. proof

INTERVIEWER. Do you outline plays before you start to write them?

FENTER. Not at all. I don't know what kind of characters my plays will have until they . . . well, until they are. Until they indicate to me what they are. I don't conceptualize in any way. Once I've got the clues I follow them—that's my job, really, to follow the clues. no conceptualization

INTERVIEWER. What do you mean by clues? Can you remember how one of your plays developed in your mind—or was it a line by line progression?

FENTER. Of course I can't remember exactly how a given play developed in my mind. I think what happens is that I write in a very high state of excitement and frustration. I follow what I see on the paper in front of me—one sentence after another. That doesn't mean I don't have a possible overall idea—the image that starts off doesn't just enter what happens immediately, it engenders the possibility of an idea all happening, which carries me through. I've got an idea of what will happen—sometimes I'm absolutely right, but on many occasions I've been proved wrong by what does actually happen. Sometimes I'm along and I find myself writing "C. comes in" when I didn't know
