

Higher Education in India: Quantity Vs Quality

Dr. Anuradha Goswami*

Abstract: Education is one of the Potential elements in the human kind. It is probably the fourth need after three basic needs viz. food, clothing and shelter. It is an essential human virtue. "Education", more education, education made perfect is the only panacea for our country's ills and evils. Through centuries, education has been a very potent tool for human kind in facing challenges and furthering progress. Education is reorganized as one of the critical elements of the national development efforts and higher education, in particular, is of vital important for the nation, as it is a powerful tool to build knowledge based society of the 21st century.

I. INTRODUCTION

In our national development process, education system has a very important role to play, specially the Higher Education. After independence, we wanted to build a modern, strong, dynamic and self-reliant India which could stand abreast with the developed nations. Education in general and higher education in particular is the strongest instrument for the development and humanization of mankind. Higher education is a very important sector for the growth and development of human resource which can take responsibility for social, economic and scientific development of the country. Higher education is recognized as a vehicle for sustainable development and is realized as a powerful tool to build knowledge based society. Higher education creates professionals, thinkers, future teachers, researchers, economist and knowledge workers, who, besides inhabiting knowledge societies, can be instrumental in creating them.

Higher education sector has witnessed a tremendous increase in its institutional capacities in the years since independence. The increase in the number of higher education institutions in recent times has brought in a positive change in our social fabrics but it has also put a premium on quality assurance. In accord with the changing perceptions there is a possibility of every institutions being subjected to mandatory accreditation in place of present voluntary submission for scrutiny. In such a scenario quality assurance becomes the watchword in every institutions and the need for maintaining healthy practices will be felt more.

After independence, we wanted to build a modern, strong, dynamic and self-reliant India which could stand abreast with the developed nations while working towards recent, the country has been facing a number of challenges and there are various issues that stand before the system of Higher Education.

II. Higher Education In India - Issues And Challenges

Although higher education has expanded several times since independence, issues of access, equity and quality still continued to be the areas of concern. New developments in science and technology, media, revolution, the trend of internationalization and the ever expanding competitive environment are revolutionizing Higher education scenario. The challenge is to produce skilled manpower with adequate knowledge and skill to effectively confront the existing social and economic realities of today. Some broad issues are like knowledge economy, complexity of Indian Federalism (Central –state relations), political and legal inertia, politicization of policy communication and implementation, funding, privatization, quality assurance, organizational cultures, internationalization of higher education.

The role of higher education institutions in this emerging scenario of knowledge economy is very crucial and multifaceted. The agenda of higher education institutions (universities) in this scenario may include opening new vistas of learning, new frontiers of researching, academic restructuring, sharing of expertise, innovation, technology transfer, knowledge management, training, employability, entrepreneurship, media convergence and meeting social, cultural and economic challenges thrown by the forces of globalization. Issues like access, equity, inclusion, quality and excellence are very complex and intertwined with political, economical, demographic and international dimensions.

Thus it is high time India recognizes the importance of reforms in higher education which is the key to the realization of the vision of the inclusive society and vibrant democracy.
