

Edge & Internet Explorer™ 11

Microsoft Edge and Internet Explorer 11 are the new web browsers from Microsoft. They are designed to be fast, secure, and easy to use. Edge is the default browser for Windows 10, while Internet Explorer 11 is the default browser for Windows 7 and Windows 8.1. Both browsers support the same standards and protocols, but they have some differences in their features and user interface.

Edge is a Chromium-based browser, which means it is built on the same open-source code as Google Chrome. This gives it many of the same features and performance benefits as Chrome, such as fast rendering, smooth scrolling, and a rich set of extensions. Edge also has some unique features, such as the EdgeHTML rendering engine, which is designed to be more efficient and secure than the older Trident engine used by Internet Explorer.

Internet Explorer 11 is a legacy browser that has been around for many years. It is still widely used by businesses and government agencies, but it is not as popular as Edge. Internet Explorer 11 has a different user interface and features than Edge, and it is not as fast or secure. However, it still supports many of the same standards and protocols as Edge, and it can be used to access many of the same websites.

There are several reasons why you might want to use Edge instead of Internet Explorer 11. Edge is faster and more secure, and it has a more modern user interface. It also supports a wider range of web standards and protocols, and it has a larger selection of extensions. Internet Explorer 11, on the other hand, is slower and less secure, and it has a more outdated user interface. It also has a smaller selection of extensions, and it is not as widely supported.

However, there are also some reasons why you might want to use Internet Explorer 11. Some websites and applications are still designed for Internet Explorer, and they may not work properly in Edge. Some businesses and government agencies also require the use of Internet Explorer 11 for security and compatibility reasons. If you are in one of these situations, you may want to continue using Internet Explorer 11.

Microsoft has announced that it will be phasing out Internet Explorer 11 in favor of Edge. This means that Internet Explorer 11 will no longer be supported in Windows 10, and it will be replaced by Edge. This is a significant change, and it will affect many users who still rely on Internet Explorer 11. Microsoft has provided a migration guide to help users switch to Edge, and it has also provided a list of websites and applications that are still supported by Internet Explorer 11.

Microsoft has also announced that it will be releasing a new version of Internet Explorer, called Internet Explorer 12. This version will be based on the EdgeHTML rendering engine, and it will have a more modern user interface and features than Internet Explorer 11. This is a significant improvement, and it will help to bridge the gap between Internet Explorer and Edge.

Microsoft has also announced that it will be releasing a new version of Edge, called Edge 80. This version will be based on the Chromium code, and it will have a more modern user interface and features than Edge 79. This is a significant improvement, and it will help to make Edge a more competitive browser.

Microsoft has also announced that it will be releasing a new version of Windows 10, called Windows 10 20H2. This version will include several new features and improvements, such as a new Start menu, a new taskbar, and a new search interface. It will also include several new security features, such as Windows Defender Security Center and Windows Security. This is a significant update, and it will help to make Windows 10 a more secure and productive operating system.

Microsoft has also announced that it will be releasing a new version of Windows 11. It will also include several new security features, such as Windows Defender Security Center and Windows Security.
