

Teaching programming Years 3–10

Use your year band for an overview of the content related to programming. In some cases it includes suggested related content as you can integrate with another learning area.

Use-Modify-Create is one approach to support and guide your students. A learner first (uses) an existing program to see what it does, then modifies it and, when able, creates a new project of their own.

Pair programming is another useful pedagogy. Two students, a driver and a navigator, work side-by-side. The driver controls the programming activities while the navigator assists with instructions for programming, looks for errors and monitors progress against the algorithm. After some time the roles are reversed.

From Years 3–4 students are expected to use a visual programming language which is often referred to as block-based programming. From Years 7–10 students are expected to use a general purpose programming (GPP) language such as Python, JavaScript or C++.

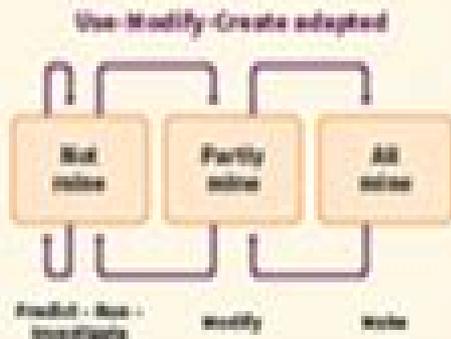

Here are a range of resources and approaches that you might use to implement programming.

| Learning resources and approaches               | Visual programming  | General purpose programming  |
|---|---|--|
| Coding platforms and environments               | Scratch, Snap, Blockly, micro:bit, Pascal code and Tynker | Replit, Glitch, JupyterLab, and CodePen, W3Schools, Swift (Apple's coding environment) |
| Online courses, tutorials and coding challenges | Code.org, Geek Academy, Scratch community                 | Geek Academy, W3Schools, Codecademy, IT Hub and Khan Academy                           |
| Project based learning                          | micro:bit, Programmable robots, App Inventor              | Arduino, Raspberry pi, micro:bit, Programmable robots and robotic kits                 |

Foundation

This concept does not appear in the Australian Curriculum Digital Technologies in Foundation.

There is related content in Mathematics.

Use and interpret everyday language of location and direction, such as behind, over, next to, forward, forward, above, below, on top of, under.

Describe the position of an object compared to another object.

Related content

Connect language of position and movement to students' lives.

Describe the position (orientation of themselves and objects in relation to other people and objects) within a familiar space (orientation to language).

Years 1–2

This concept does not appear in the Australian Curriculum Digital Technologies in Years 1–2.

A precursor to using a formal programming language is to use a grid to plan programmable floor robots.

This enables students to use computational thinking, learn basic programming concepts and implement simple algorithms. (See Algorithms)

There is related content in Mathematics.

Provide relevant contexts to use locational and directional language such as opposite, half turns, left and right, forwards and backwards, clockwise and anti-clockwise, and use steps to describe distance.

Related content

Using a floor robot to move along a pathway.

Use and label directions to move people and objects in different locations within a space. (Mathematics in context) Use grid patterns to map directional representations of a familiar space. Mark patterns by following directions and pathways. (Mathematics in context)
