Police Personnel System:

The Police Personnel System, 1983 Civil Service Systems George W. Greisinger, Jeffrey S. Slovak, Joseph J. Molkup, 1979 Positive and negative effects of civil service regulations on urban police systems is the focus of this research project conducted over approximately a 2 year period beginning in November 1976 Data from the study were collected from 42 randomly selected American cities ranging in size from 50 000 to 750 000 persons In each study site current civil service laws and police union contracts were collected interviews were conducted with the most knowledgeable municipal officials and organization representatives and police departments provided information on programs and policies in a police departmental questionnaire Supplemental data were provided by the Police Foundation the National Planning Association and the FBI The absence of an overall civil service system which governs police personnel affairs in America is noted Civil service commissions differ from city to city in the roles they play in police personnel administration and as a result in the impacts they have on local officials on police departmental programs and practices and on the general quality of local law enforcement While some commissions pose significant constraints on the abilities of local officials to promote innovative police programs others work to promote departmental innovation and more efficient criminal apprehension procedures The study examines a number of issues among them the statutory supports for local civil service commissions and the impact of community politics and police unionism on local police personnel administration Proposals for civil service reforms in the urban police context should be tailored to local circumstances and to meaningful variations in civil service roles Numerous charts footnotes a bibliography and diagrams illustrate the text Appendixes include content analysis checklists for police bargaining contracts and personnel systems a police questionnaire an interview schedule and a letter to urban executives

Police Personnel Management Information Systems Wayne F. Cascio, 1977 Design development and implementation of a computerized police personnel management information system PPMIS in Dade County Florida and Dallas Texas are reported A PPMIS can aid with complex administrative problems by making all useful employee information readily available it may prove particularly useful in meeting the requirements of civil rights legislation and for police personnel research Depending on the complexity of the system a PPMIS may be used in training evaluation and for evaluation and performance counseling In planning for a PPMIS decisions should first be made on the type of information that will be collected the method which will be used for obtaining data the type of reports which will be used operational regulatory and or analytical updating procedures and data security precautions For both the Dallas and the Dade County police inaccessible and obsolete personnel information was a major problem and there was a pressing need to broaden channels of communication reduce useless duplication of information and formalize placement procedures Prior to implementation of the PPMIS both relied on a manual process of personnel record maintenance Objectives of the Dallas PPMIS included provision of a personal history file for each officer a personnel position file a bimonthly review of court dates for each officer a means for creating departmental mailing lists monthly batches of personnel changes and police personnel and monthly totals by rank race and sex of sworn personnel as well as monthly strength reports and a comparison of authorized versus actual personnel Dade county objectives included the provision of a centrally located means of storing selectively retrieving statistically manipulating a large amount of personnel information in a secure pertinent and simple to use system and to provide a means for monitoring usage and possible expansion in response to future needs Both systems incorporate a number of security precautions to ensure privacy and confidentiality of information Implementation and monthly maintenance costs for the computerized systems are compared with manual system costs The following steps should be used in implementation of a PPMIS 1 obtain advice and support of city or county technical computer personnel 2 compile a master subject list 3 contact all supervisory personnel who will be using the system and describe the system to them 4 identify all files containing information on sworn personnel 5 locate and obtain sample copies of all forms used by the department over the past 25 years and analyze information categories 6 have all users review this list 7 create a personnel update form 8 begin data collection and check for accuracy and legibility and 9 once system is operational provide user orientation and training sessions Appendixes include data forms information items included in both the Dallas and Dade County systems data collection forms and sample profiles from the Dallas PPMIS References are included
