- ¹ This special issue brings together papers presented in May 2021 at a seminar celebrating the seventy-fifth birthday of Professor Zoya V. Dmitrieva.¹ It was organized by a group of her pupils and colleagues at the National Research University "Higher School of Economics" in St. Petersburg, Russia. The seminar aimed to explore new ways of approaching early modern Russian economic and social history that combine a thorough command of the primary sources—an expertise highly valued in the field—with international theoretical and methodological innovations. This special issue is both a tribute to Professor Dmitrieva and an opportunity to situate her experience within the wider context of the development of the economic history of early modern Russia as an academic discipline from the late Soviet period to the present.

- ² Zoya V. Dmitrieva's scientific career is a long and successful one. Born in 1946, she studied sixteenth- and seventeenth-century Russian history at Leningrad State University, which shaped her further professional development. She was part of the group of students who, in the second half of the 1960s, were involved in preparing
