A Nation Unaware

The Canadian Economic Culture

Canada takes one contradiction in its teeth but has its tail bitten off by another ■ ... what we are most in need of in Canada is ideological liveliness ■ Public enterprise is indigenous to the Canadian demography ■ It is exactly because we were the losers of the American Revolution that we can now become winners of a Canadian one ■ Labour and community cannot be allowed to move freely to capital; capital must move to labour and community ■ Life, liberty and the pursuit of regional equality ... liberty, fraternity, regional equality ■ To get at the Canadian circumstance ... is above all to see the country in terms of its contradictions ■ The American-ideology-in-Canada, with all of its phantasmagoric potency, stands Canadian reality on its head ■ No nation ever grew up more absurd, and is taking so long to grow out of its absurdity ■ Something inherent to the very spirit and definition of free enterprise proved to be the ultimate folly — competition. Was there ever any point to it here? ■ There is ... nothing less provincial than the Canadian mainstream, once it unhooks itself from its colonial chastity belt ■ Canada, in its essentials, is a public enterprise country, always has been, and probably always will be. ... Canadians have a genius for public enterprise ■ The efficiency is in the culture, not in the counting house ■ Giving concrete form to what is least conservative and most adventurous about us is what public enterprise in Canada is all about ■ Monopoly is the economic model. Monopoly suits us, and always has ■ Let a thousand crown corporations bloom. Let a thousand public enterprises contend. But not in the same market ■ "The price of being a Canadian" is really the price we pay for being Americans-in-Canada ■ The Canadian public enterprise culture and the redistribution culture unite into a momentous aptitude for egalitarianism.
