National Immunization Program Financing Abatement Mongolia:

Mongolia National Immunization Program Asian Development Bank, 2001 Setting the Course Institute of Medicine, Division of Health Care Services, Committee on the Immunization Finance Dissemination Workshops, 2002-01-31 The federal and state partnership in supporting immunization programs that benefit the general population evolved over the last half of the 20th century from a simple cost sharing arrangement for vaccine purchase for disadvantaged children to a more complicated mix of programs health care coverage benefits and public private partnerships The mix of financial arrangements that support immunization efforts was the subject of a study by the Institute of Medicine resulting in the publication of the report Calling the Shots In June 2001 a group of 50 health officials public health experts health care providers health plan representatives and community leaders met at the University of Illinois in Chicago to explore the implications of the IOM findings and recommendations for the states of Illinois and Michigan The one day workshop was the first in a series of four meetings organized by IOM with support from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to foster informed discussions about future financing strategies for the public health infrastructure that supports immunization efforts This report of the Chicago workshop summarizes the findings of the IOM study and reviews the challenges that remain in establishing a reliable financial base for the U S immunization system The report high lights strategies presented by workshop speakers and discussants for achieving immunization goals including increases in state and federal public health budgets the addition of quality improvement measures in health plans performance based contracting public policy actions and the creation of public private partnerships Calling the Shots Institute of Medicine, Division of Health Promotion and Disease Prevention, Division of Health Care Services, Committee on Immunization Finance Policies and Practices, 2000-12-13 Calling the Shots examines the basic strategies that finance the national immunization system in the current health care climate It is a comprehensive volume rich with data and highlighted examples that explores The evolution of the system in light of changing U S demographics development of new vaccines and other factors The effectiveness of public health and health insurance strategies with special emphasis on the performance of the Section 317 program The condition of the infrastructure for control and prevention of infectious disease surveillance of vaccines rates and safety and efforts to sustain high coverage Calling the Shots will be an indispensable resource to those responsible for maintaining our nation s vaccine vigilance Setting the Course Institute of Medicine, Board on Health Care Services, Committee on the Immunization Finance Dissemination Workshops, 2003-12-07 In 2000 the Institute of Medicine IOM produced a report Calling the Shots Immunization Finance Policies and Practices IOM 2000a that illustrated the uncertainties and instability of the public health infrastructure that supports U S immunization programs The IOM report proposed several strategies to address these concerns and to strengthen the immunization infrastructure In March 2002 a group of 50 health officials public health experts health care providers health plan representatives health care purchasers and community leaders met at The National Academies in Washington DC to explore the implications of the IOM findings and recommendations for the federal and state governments Private health plans and business sector representatives also participated in the meeting to discuss their role in fostering high levels of immunization coverage The one day workshop was the fourth and last in a series of meetings organized by IOM with support from the CDC to foster informed discussions about future financing strategies for immunization and the public health infrastructure This report of the Washington DC workshop summarizes the findings of the IOM study reviews the implementation of the IOM recommendations and highlights continuing immunization finance challenges for the nation as a whole as well as state and local health departments

Setting the Course Institute of Medicine, Board on Health Care Services, Committee on the Immunization Finance Dissemination Workshops, 2003-03-05

Immunization is essential to disease prevention efforts in public health but the nation's immunization system faces financing challenges that are affecting the delivery of services A 2000 report from the Institute of Medicine IOM Calling the Shots Immunization Finance Policies and Practices IOM 2000 pointed to the instability of the fundamental infrastructure that supports immunization programs throughout the United States including unpredictable federal funding levels growing financial burdens and operational complexities in immunization services shortcomings in public and private sector investments in vaccine purchases and immunization programs and fluctuations in coverage plans in the public and private health care sectors that create uncertainties regarding vaccine purchase and service delivery arrangements In January 2002 health officials public health experts health care providers health plan representatives health care purchasers and community leaders met at the University of California at Los Angeles to explore the implications of the IOM findings and recommendations for California in general and for Los Angeles and San Diego County in particular The one day workshop was the third in a series of four meetings organized by IOM with support from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to foster informed discussions about challenges for immunization finance and future financing strategies for immunization activities and the public health infrastructure that supports those activities This report of the Los Angeles workshop summarizes the findings of the IOM study reviews progress in responding to the IOM recommendations at the federal level and highlights continuing challenges in immunization finance for the nation and at the state and local levels in California

Setting the Course Institute of Medicine, Division of Health Care Services, Committee on the Immunization Finance Dissemination Workshops, 2002-09-17

Immunization is essential to disease prevention efforts in public health but the U S health care system faces financial challenges that are affecting the delivery of immunization services An earlier report from the Institute of Medicine IOM Calling the Shots Immunization Finance Policies and Practices pointed to the instability of the fundamental infrastructure that supports immunization programs throughout the United States including growing financial burdens and operational complexities in immunization services shortcomings in public and private sector investments in vaccine purchases and immunization programs and fluctuations in insurance plans in the public and private health care sectors that create uncertainties regarding coverage of vaccine purchase and service delivery arrangements In October 2001 a group of about 50 health officials public health experts health care providers health plan representatives and purchasers state legislative officials and community leaders met at the Texas Medical Association in Austin to explore the implications of the IOM findings and recommendations for Texas The 1 day workshop was the second in a series of four meetings organized by IOM with support from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to foster informed discussions about challenges for immunization finance and future strategies for strengthening immunization activities and the public health infrastructure that supports those activities This report of the Austin workshop summarizes the findings of the previous IOM report and reviews continuing challenges in immunization finance for the nation and for individual states with a particular focus on Texas The report also highlights strategies proposed by individual workshop participants that can be used to address those challenges Several presenters and discussants emphasized that adequate funding is necessary for immunization programs but that financial resources alone are not sufficient to guarantee success Similarly they indicated that no single agency or group in the public or the private sector should expect or should be expected to solve immunization problems Speakers from both public and private health agencies observed that collaboration consultation and partnership efforts across levels of government and between the public and private sectors are essential

Financing Vaccines in the 21st Century Institute of Medicine, Board on Health Care Services, Committee on the Evaluation of Vaccine Purchase Financing in the United States, 2003-12-10 The national immunization system has achieved high levels of immunization particularly for children However this system faces difficult challenges for the future Significant disparities remain in assuring access to recommended vaccines across geographic and demographic populations These disparities result in part from fragmented public private financing in which a large number of children and adults face limited access to immunization services Access for adults lags well behind that of children and rates of immunizations for those who are especially vulnerable because of chronic health conditions such as diabetes or heart and lung disease remain low Financing Vaccines in the 21st Century Assuring Access and Availability addresses these challenges by proposing new strategies for assuring access to vaccines and sustaining the supply of current and future vaccines The book recommends changes to the Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices ACIP the entity that currently recommends vaccines and calls for a series of public meetings a post implementation evaluation study and development of a research agenda to facilitate implementation of the plan

Immunization Finance Toolkit GAVI Alliance, Weltbank, 2010 Financing is a critical component of a sustainable Immunization program The Immunization Financing Toolkit is a series of short briefs on different options for financing national immunization programs and vaccines It is intended to serve as a resource for program managers and decision makers in ministries of health planning and finance The Toolkit brings together the most up to date knowledge on the characteristics of various types of financing mechanisms as well as information on how the mechanisms are being implemented in practice their potential benefits and their limitations Where possible case studies on specific financing options are included The field of immunization financing continues to evolve and the Toolkit will therefore be web based and easily downloaded from the internet As a web based tool the Toolkit contains links to other relevant websites for further understanding The Toolkit is also available on a CD Rom This version of the Toolkit is an update of the Immunization Financing Options produced by the Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunization GAVI Alliance in 2001 Health sector funding and management have evolved over the last decade making the previous document out of date New and innovative financing mechanisms to support immunization and the health sector have been developed and the types and costs of vaccines have changed In addition policy makers and development partners have become much more knowledgeable about health financing
