

The neutral theory of molecular evolution

Motoo Kimura (1968)

High levels of polymorphism (variation) in protein and DNA sequences among individuals and species are difficult to reconcile with mutation-selection equilibrium (Ch 5.4)

Most mutations affecting fitness are deleterious, hence quickly eliminated by selection

Ergo: Essentially all new mutations eventually fixed are neutral, and evolve only by genetic drift

- Do evolutionary biologists ever tire of debating whether selection or drift dominates the evolutionary process?
