

Urban Planning (1920-1930) The early 20th century saw a shift in urban planning, moving away from the grid system of the 19th century to more organic, park-like layouts. This was influenced by the Garden City movement and the work of architects like Frank Lloyd Wright, who advocated for a more integrated approach to housing and nature. The result was a new type of urban form, one that was more human-scaled and more aesthetically pleasing.

Art History (1910-1930) The early 20th century was a period of significant artistic innovation. The Cubist movement, led by Pablo Picasso and Georges Braque, revolutionized the way we see the world, breaking down objects into geometric forms and reassembling them in a new, abstract way. This was a departure from the traditional perspective of the Renaissance and Baroque eras.

The Great Depression (1930-1940) The economic crisis of the 1930s had a profound impact on American art and culture. Artists like the members of the Federal Art Project turned to social realism, depicting the struggles of the working class and the impact of the crisis on everyday life. This was a stark contrast to the more idealized art of the previous decades.

Modernist Architecture (1920-1930) The early 20th century saw the rise of modernist architecture, which rejected the ornate, historical styles of the past. Architects like Le Corbusier and Mies van der Rohe embraced a new aesthetic based on clean lines, open spaces, and the use of new materials like steel and concrete. This was a radical departure from the traditional architectural canon.
