the migration of birds, 1912 The Migration of Birds by T A Coward is a scientific publication written in the early 20th century This work meticulously explores the phenomenon of bird migration presenting various theories and factual observations gathered from the efforts of numerous ornithologists The focus lies on understanding the intricate behaviors patterns and environmental influences that drive different species of birds to migrate seasonally At the start of the book Coward sets the stage by defining migration and explaining its significance to birds and other species He delves into the complexities of migration noting that while the traditional view categorizes birds as either migratory or sedentary many species exhibit varying degrees of movement based on seasonal changes food availability and breeding needs The opening chapters introduce key concepts related to the causes and conditions of migration as well as the historical understanding of these patterns reflecting the author s thorough research and commitment to advancing knowledge in the field of ornithology This is an automatically generated summary

Bird Migration Peter Berthold, 2001 The question of how birds migrate over enormous distances with apparently minimal guidance continues to excite both professional and amateur ornithologists Nearly ten years have elapsed since Peter Berthold a leading researcher in the field wrote the first edition of this highly readable and fascinating book During that time the field has advanced by strides so that this new edition has been extensively revised expanded and updated No other book exists that brings together the vast amount of information that is available on the subject of bird migration so that the book will be an inspiration to birdwatchers naturalists and ornithologists alike

Migration of Birds \(Classic Reprint\) Frederick C. Lincoln, 2016-08-13 Excerpt from Migration of Birds Throughout the ages the return flights of migratory birds have been important as a source of food after a lean winter and as the harbinger of a change in season The arrival of certain species has been heralded with appropriate ceremonies in many lands and among the Eskimos and other tribes the phenomenon to this day is the accepted sign of the imminence of spring and of warmer weather The pioneer fur traders in Alaska and Canada offered rewards to the Indian or Eskimo who saw the first goose of the spring and all joined in jubilant welcome to the newcomer As the North American Continent became more thickly settled the large flocks of ducks and geese that always had been hunted for food became objects of the enthusiastic attention of an increasing army of sportsmen Most of the nongame species were found to be valuable also as allies of the farmer in his never ending warfare against weed and insect pests The need for laws protecting the valuable game and nongame birds and for regulating the hunting of the diminishing game species followed as a natural course In the management of this wild life resource it has become obvious that continuous studies must be made of the food habits of the various species their environmental needs and their travels Hence bird investigations are made by the Fish and Wildlife Service the bureau charged by Congress under the Migratory Bird Treaty Act with the duty of protecting those species that in their yearly journeys pass back and forth between the United States and Canada and between the United States and Mexico For more than half a century the Fish and Wildlife Service and its predecessor the Biological Survey have been collecting data on the interesting and important phenomenon of the migration of North American birds The field men of the Service have gathered information concerning the distribution and seasonal movements of the different species in many extended areas from the Arctic coast south to the pampas of Argentina. Supplementing these investigations is the work of hundreds of volunteer ornithologists and bird students throughout the United States and Canada who each year spring and fall forward to the Service reports on the migrations as observed in their respective localities. Added to the mass of data thus assembled is a rapidly growing recovery file of marked individuals. These data together with other carded records gleaned by the Fish and Wildlife Service from a vast literature constitute a series of files that now contain well over entries easily the greatest existing accumulation of information pertaining to the distribution and movements of North American birds. Not only do the facts thus assembled form the basis of regulatory action for the protection of the birds but they also make it possible to publish scientific accounts of the ranges and migrations of the different species. They furnish the basis of this bulletin.

Bird Migration Donald Redfield Griffin, 1974. Describes a sequence of experiments conducted over the past few years in the field of bird migration and navigation. For the specialist and interested layman.

Bird Migration and Global Change George W. Cox, 2010-07-07. Changes in seasonal movements and population dynamics of migratory birds in response to ongoing changes resulting from global climate changes are a topic of great interest to conservation scientists and birdwatchers around the world. Because of their dependence on specific habitats and resources in different geographic regions at different phases of their annual cycle, migratory species are especially vulnerable to the impacts of climate change. In Bird Migration and Global Change, eminent ecologist George W. Cox brings his extensive experience as a scientist and bird enthusiast to bear in evaluating the capacity of migratory birds to adapt to the challenges of a changing climate. Cox reviews, synthesizes, and interprets recent and emerging science on the subject, beginning with a discussion of climate change and its effect on habitat, and followed by eleven chapters that examine responses of bird types across all regions of the globe. The final four chapters address the evolutionary capacity of birds and consider how best to shape conservation strategies to protect migratory species in coming decades. The rate of climate change is faster now than at any other moment in recent geological history. How best to manage migratory birds to deal with this challenge is a major conservation issue, and Bird Migration and Global Change is a unique and timely contribution to the literature.

Bird Migration Eberhard Gwinner, 1990-10-30. In the quiet halls of the natural history museum, there are some creatures still alive with stories whose personalities refuse to be relegated to the dusty corners of an exhibit. The fame of these beasts during their lifetimes has given them an iconic status in death More than just museum specimens these animals have attained a second life as historical and cultural records This collection of essays from a broad array of contributors including anthropologists curators fine artists geographers historians and journalists comprises short biographies of a number of famous taxidermized animals Each essay traces the life death and museum afterlife of a specific creature illuminating the overlooked role of the dead beast in the modern human animal encounter through practices as disparate as hunting and zookeeping The contributors offer fresh examinations of the many levels at which humans engage with other animals especially those that function as both natural and cultural phenomena including Queen Charlotte s pet zebra Maharajah the elephant and Balto the sled dog among others Readers curious about the enduring fascination with animals who have attained these strange afterlives will be drawn to the individual narratives within each essay while learning more about the scientific cultural and museological contexts of each subject Ranging from autobiographical to analytical the contributors varying styles make this delightful book a true menagerie Contributors Samuel J M M Alberti Royal College of Surgeons Sophie Everest University of Manchester Kate Foster Michelle Henning University of the West of England Bristol Hayden Lorimer University of Glasgow Garry Marvin Roehampton University London Henry Nicholls Hannah Paddon Merle Patchett Christopher Plumb University of Manchester Rachel Poliquin Jeanne Robinson Glasgow Museums Mike Rutherford University of the West Indies Richard C Sabin Natural History Museum Richard Sutcliffe Glasgow Museums Geoffrey N Swinney University of Edinburgh
