Museums in a Global Context Jennifer Dickey, Samir El Azhar, Catherine Lewis, 2013-04-30 Museums reflect a nation's character as well as define it Museums around the world have been shaped by globalization and in turn have shaped a global public's understanding of local regional or national identity Essayists consider the politics of museum interpretation in the global context issues of cultural patrimony and heritage tourism the risks of crossing boundaries and borders to present controversial subjects and strategies for engaging audiences and communities International case studies from Germany Morocco Saudi Arabia Qatar South Africa Niger and Vietnam underscore the common motives and sensibilities as well as the challenges of the world's museums in their efforts to educate and inspire A Study of the Historical Development of American Museums and Their Role in Public Education R. Kavan Di Pignatelli, 1989 This thesis describes the historical development of American museums and their role in public education The focus is upon the traditional concept of a museum as an educational entity functioning as a depository for the preservation of cultural objects and as a research center for the dissemination of knowledge Historically today's museum and in particular the American museum has as its heritage the role of an educational entity a depository devoted to the collection preservation and conservation of cultural objects and as a research center for the dissemination of knowledge gained from the research of the natural and cultural environment A history of the development of the American museum's heritage from essentially Protestant and English beginnings and especially the patterns of philanthropy and inherent democratic traditions will illustrate the significance of museums in public education The research concludes that the traditional triple functions and in particular the role of an educational institution is assuming an even greater emphasis in contemporary museology This validity is evidenced by the metamorphosis of the American museum into a parallel school for the general public and that the museum's most significant contribution to the concept of the museum has been and will be in the future in the field of public education Historically many museums have presented fragmented information based often on esoteric and even exotic culture history which has denied the visitor any sense of cultural relativism Universals of cultural adaptation and explanations have frequently expressed personal biases which lead to further ethnocentrism and nationalism Displays and interpretations invariably reflected eclectic and unintegrated phases of human history ones which often reiterated the collector's sense of superiority and in some instances a cause for Social Darwinism Therefore it is posited that an increasing emphasis upon the natural sciences and associated pedagogical philosophies in primary and secondary school curriculums demonstrate the importance of community and national museums to participate more in public education Document Directory of Michigan Museums Geneva Smithe,1930 Bibliography of Museums and Museology Metropolitan Museum of Art (New York, N.Y.).
