

Neurological Differential Diagnosis

by JOHN PATTEN, 292 pp., ill., London, Harold Starke, Limited; New York, Berlin, Springer-Verlag, 1977. $24.70

This book is written for the "novice who wishes to develop a feel for the subject." Written with a very personal style, it reflects the way the "author coped" with learning how to approach the clinical problems of classical neurology. It is organized in an original way, dealing with some signs and subjects primarily on a regional basis and others in terms of symptoms and history.

The book is clearly written by a clinically oriented author who comes across as a capable clinician and good teacher. It is easier to read than most basic introductions to the neurologic examination because the format prevents the reader from getting bored and shows immediately the practicality of one's efforts.

The topical chapters include such titles as the "Pupils and their reaction," "Visual fields," "Cerebellopontine angle and jugular foramen," "Conjugate eye movements and nystagmus," and "Cerebral hemispheres." Others, on symptoms, include "Face pain," "Headaches," and "Attacks of altered consciousness."

In each chapter the pertinent anatomy is given with the aid of simple, effective diagrams. These are correlated with clinical examination and a discussion of how common disease and common lesions produce signs and symptoms. The chapter on visual fields, for example, shows how to test for visual field defects, and teaches the anatomy of visual fields and pathways. This is followed by a discussion of approaches to patients who have "blurred vision in one eye" or "sudden visual deterioration in both eyes." There are case reports, a discussion of visual evoked responses and common clinical situations.

If I had to pick out one problem with this book, it is the unfortunate decision not to include references. Many statements are made which I found interesting but I wondered whether they were the author's views or based on some work I was not familiar with. For example, the statement that "It has recently been shown that 80 per cent of diabetic patients react to methacholine . . . and only 8 per cent of normal subjects show the same response" is clearly not the author's personal experience. It cannot be traced to its source.

This is an unusual experiment in teaching an approach to clinical neurology that appeals to me because of its readability and fluency. To expect a student or intern to read the usual book on clinical examination is to punish him with chapters in "How to take a history," "How to do a neurologic exam," "Neuroanatomy," and "Neurophysiology," before he sees the fruits of his efforts. This book has some practical clinical rewards by the fourth page.

I would recommend it to those who are responsible for teaching students or have medical house officers rotating through neurologic services. Some will want to recommend it to their students. It belongs in the departmental libraries where students, house officers and even residents can read it with profit. It is not a book for the practicing neurologist or his library.

H. RICHARD TYLER, M.D.

Motor Neurone Disease

edited by F. CLIFFORD ROSE, 147 pp., New York, Grune & Stratton, 1977. $14.75

We haven't made much progress in understanding the cause of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS). The diagnosis rests almost entirely on clinical criteria but few errors are made and, because there is no treatment, the pronouncement is a death sentence. Often striking young adults or mature and productive individuals, ALS is one of the most tragic of the many poignant problems that neurologists have to deal with. We all want to do something. So, from time to time, we have a conference to review the present situation and, we hope, to generate new ideas. Dr. Rose has edited the proceedings of a British symposium held in 1976, with contributions on the appropriate topics by illustrious clinicians and investigators. Unfortunately, not much is new, and the book, admirably succinct, will serve best those who are being introduced to the disease. Investigators will want to know about it because there are some thoughtful comments about the role of epidemiology, axonal transport, abiotrophy, slow viruses and other aspects.

LEWIS P. ROWLAND, M.D.

Handbook of Clinical Neurology, Vol. 27, Metabolic and Deficiency Diseases of the Nervous System, Part I.

edited by P. J. VINKEN and G. W. BRUYN, 541 pp., ill., American Elsevier Publishing Company, New York, 1976. $80.95

This is the first of three consecutive volumes dealing with metabolic and deficiency diseases of the nervous system. As indicated in the introduction, the editors were quite insecure about what to include under the rubric of metabolic disease and their problems in this regard have unfortunately been reflected in the content and arrangement of the subject matter.

Volume 27 is introduced by detailed discussions of the biochemistry of carbohydrate and energy metabolism of the brain and the biochemical changes associated with cerebral infarction. More clinically-oriented chapters follow, on cerebral anoxia; the neurologic effects of hypoglycemia and hyperglycemia; disorders of polysaccharide and glycogen metabolism; the neurologic complications of renal and liver disease, disordered bilirubin metabolism, porphyria, and of thyroid and parathyroid dysfunction. Included also are chapters on the xanthososes, pancreatic encephalopathy, and the biochemical aspects of dementia, memory and learning, brain tumor, and Refsum disease.

Discussions of those topics generally are detailed and authoritative, in keeping with the standards set in previous volumes of the Handbook. Yet a few important omissions should be mentioned. A detailed clinical and pathologic description of anoxic encephalopathy is lacking and so-called dialysis dementia or encephalopathy is barely mentioned. One might question dividing cerebral anoxia into anoxic, anemic, and stagnant types—a con-
