

METACOGNITION IN EDUCATIONAL THEORY AND PRACTICE

...from reading text material is an important skill to acquire if individuals are to be efficient learners... If education is to progress beyond rote learning, an important goal should be to teach students to know when to stop reading. One of the factors influencing comprehension monitoring of expository texts, are interactions... Teachers and educational researchers should pay attention to these factors and their attempts to improve students' comprehension monitoring... Hacker recommends that once a text has been read, readers can read secondary sources in which alternative interpretations of the primary source are provided... ing one's understanding of a text can be gained... a deeper understanding of the text... that "the successful bilingual readers' understanding is a sophisticated set of reading strategies demonstrated one possible model that applies to the balancing their... and bilingual language proficiency... McGilly... states that "regular... of deficits for... social implications of treatment and management... Patients who are... in... likely to be... rehabilitation... older adults... necessary will improve their self-regulated learning... Perhaps... little or no... its spontaneous... monitor less... do understand students' study activities... Winner and Hacker's develop the COPERs which "focuses studying as metacognitively controlled self-regulated learning that goes
