

THE PATH TO LEADERSHIP

CHURCHILL: "I doubt if any man in history has ever made such grim utterances and yet given his people such a feeling of strength and exuberance—even cheerfulness and light-heartedness. But it is interesting to reflect that if it had not been for Hitler's war he would very possibly have gone down to history as a political failure!"

DE GAULLE: "Calmness in the crisis, decision, the ability to withdraw and have time to think. And overall, the ability, will and courage to express clearly what he wants to do . . . All these qualities, particularly decision and courage, seem to me to be lacking in so many political leaders of the present day."

NEHRU: "He has an intense interest in the masses of the Indian people and their problems, and here lies the key to his political power."

FIELD-MARSHAL MONTGOMERY

applies his lively mind and his great gifts for clear and imaginative thinking to a subject of paramount importance today.

defines the qualities of leadership

"Leadership is based on truth and character. The true leader must be able to dominate, and finally to master, the events that surround him. I believe that leaders are made rather than born, that leadership can be developed by training."

studies a variety of great leaders

both historical and contemporary, from Moses to Mao, to analyse the qualities that give a man power over his fellow men, and to see where that has led them.

MOSES: "He refused to launch Israel into battle until he was ready. He had the wisdom to realize that the best way to raise morale in an army is by victories in battle."

ALFRED THE GREAT: "Possibly the greatest king England ever had—one of the great men of all time; his work endured."

CROMWELL: "As a military chief I put him in the top grade. As a political chief and national leader he was not so successful. He tried out five different systems of government and all failed."

LINCOLN: "He considered the function of a political leader in a democracy is not to impose his will, but to guide the people towards deciding wisely for themselves."

Field-Marshal Montgomery is one of the greatest military leaders of our time.
