Margaret Fell James Herbert Midgley, 1916 Margaret Fell and the End of Time Sally Bruyneel, 2010 Margaret Fell and the End of Time offers an unprecedented interpretation of the life and theology of one of the central figures of the seventeenth century Quaker movement While Fell has been the subject of some historical research until this book she had not been studied as a religious author or theologian in her own right Taking her seriously as a prophetic and practical theologian Sally Bruyneel systematically analyzes Fell's writings on both Quaker and orthodox Christian subjects ranging from the Inward Light to eschatology to the Trinity. In doing so she demonstrates that Fell was deeply influenced by Biblical apocalyptic literature and the strong eschatological expectations of her time which became central to her work with the Jews for her defense of the spirituality equality of women and for her promotion of the Quaker testimony of peace.

Quaker Communities in Early Modern Wales Richard C. Allen, 2007

Quakerism has long fascinated historians and religious scholars and Richard Allen's examination of the community's rise and fall in Wales holds a wealth of new insights. The prominent role played by women, the resilience of Quakers in the face of a variety of forms of official persecution, the ways that education, careers and marriage were determined by a strict code of conduct and the reasons for Quakerism's decline all come under consideration here. As the first scholarly analysis of Welsh Quakers, this book represents an important new contribution to our knowledge of the movement.
