Abstract

The concentration of 27 trace elements have been determined in the total air particulate matter as well as in its inhalable size segregated fractions collected in urban, industrialised and rural–residential areas in the North of Italy. By means of multistage inertial impactors trace element granulometric distribution has been measured in the PM10 (particles with an Equivalent Aerodynamic Diameter –AED– of less than 10  $\mu\text{m}$ ) and in its subsequent “respirable” fractions (alveolar, bronchial and tracheo–pharynx), which contain particles with nominal diameter from 0 to less than 9  $\mu\text{m}$ .

All of the measurements have been carried out by Instrumental Neutron Activation Analysis (INAA).

For all investigated elements the granulometric distribution trends found in different locations are reported and compared.
