

très beau tableau de son temps, dont il reste un représentant en quelque sorte typique, et nous ne saurions mieux faire que de citer la conclusion de S. Ayache: 'Par son contenu ou ses ignorances, par sa richesse ou ses erreurs et préjugés, l'oeuvre d'histoire elle-même témoigne d'une époque; et l'homme qui la créa vécut le premier cette crise de conscience où s'engage, à partir de 1820 et depuis Tananarive, le XIXe siècle malgache.'

C'est dire assez la place de choix que les malgachisants, après les Malgaches eux-mêmes, doivent assigner à Raombana.

ALAIN DELIVRÉ

MOROCCO

Prelude to Protectorate in Morocco: precolonial protest and resistance, 1860-1912.

By EDMUND BURKE III. Chicago and London: University of Chicago Press, 1976. Pp. xii + 306. £13.90.

Resistance in the Desert: Moroccan responses to French imperialism, 1881-1912.

By ROSS DUNN. London: Croom Helm, 1977. Pp. 291. £12.50.

It is now evident from recent historical and sociological research and reappraisal that the formal establishment of French and Spanish colonial rule in Morocco in 1912 was merely the culmination of a lengthy process of European penetration and progressive domination of Moroccan economic and political life that began early in the nineteenth century. The undoubted weakness of the Moroccan state in the closing decades of the nineteenth century and the first decade of the twentieth are now revealed to be as much the product of growing foreign intervention as of some inherent structural incapacity of the Moroccan political economy. During the second half of the nineteenth century, the inability of the Moroccan makhzen (central government and state apparatus) to maintain financial and military control was associated with increasing rural unrest. This took many forms and involved a variety of different social groups and classes. Sporadic outbreaks of protest became more common, often in direct response to measures adopted in desperation by the makhzen. There were popular rebellions on a larger scale, revolts led by tribal chiefs or local lords, and movements instigated by pretenders to the sultan's throne. And the last decades of the nineteenth century also saw the beginnings of local resistance to French and Spanish intervention as the European powers turned increasingly from policies of manipulation to more direct forms of control.

Both these books deal with protest and resistance in the last decades of formal Moroccan independence, but their focus is significantly different. Burke offers a survey of the situation in Morocco as a whole; Dunn offers a detailed analysis of economic and political change in the south-east. Both, however, attempt to link the local and the specific to the more general, and make a useful contribution to the history of European imperialism and its local effects. Burke promises most, and certainly provides much that is stimulating; finally, however, his book is disappointing in a number of respects. Dunn is more modest in scope and partly as a result has produced an excellent study of the intricacies of local responses to economic and political change within a carefully delineated geographical, social and historical context.
