Forgotten Realities M.J. Romyantsev, 2016-08-31 Science Fiction of a somewhat different kind The book Forgotten Realities by M J Romyantsev is a sequel to VI Seconds a new collection of science fiction short stories and philosophical essays In VI Seconds one of the characters asks a very simple question which retains its relevancy even in our time Who are we then oh Master what are we As much as it hurts me to say this to you my dear friends I do not know I really no longer know answered Kah the Wise absentmindedly which was quite unusual for him Forgotten Realities gives a possible even plausible answer to the above question Excerpt from the book's Epilogue Any two dimensional structure including this book cannot possibly express adequately the splendour of objects and structures existing in higher dimensions It can only approximate them to an extent Our minds can then perhaps be used in order to compensate for this 2 D cannot adequately reflect and depict structures in n D limitation but they too are bound by the dimensional enclosure we exist in Yes they too are feeble The best one can do and hope for is to make yet another drawing on the walls of the cave in the cognitive sense of the word we call life as one goes through one of its gangways trying to paint on its walls one's own impressions of how it all really might be in n D This book is one of such drawings The concept of multiple layered containers of realities is probably what our esteemed reader should take with him Whilst we may not agree with the conclusions made by one of the book's main charters namely that these multiverse containers are by definition morals neutral and unrelated to the concepts of good and bad i e that they just are and may contain anything in parallel we should at least give him the benefit of the doubt Perhaps he is right after all but then again who are we to judge
