The prediagnostic phase is divided into preclinical and prodromal stages and may predate the clinical diagnosis by 10–15 years. The key risk factors, namely, genetic, environmental, lifestyle, gastrointestinal, and as yet unknown cellular pathological mechanisms, are shown here as influencing one another to cause PD. The key signs and symptoms reported in the preclinical and prodromal stages also begin 5–10 years earlier, and eventually overlap with the classically described motor features of PD (shown to the extreme right).
