Beauty in Architecture Nele De Raedt,Maarten Delbeke,2025-09-18 Beauty in Architecture brings together the views of architects artists critics historians and philosophers to explore how beauty can again become an integral part of discussions about architecture Despite its recent resurgence in the public debate about the built environment the notion of beauty remains problematic and contested in critical discourse about architecture When the topic is addressed it is either treated with suspicion historicized or contextualised or substituted with other often equally problematic terms such as order legibility atmosphere or character This collection brings together voices from theory scholarship and practice to show that a conversation about beauty in architecture is necessary not only because the general public speaks easily and frequently about beauty in architecture but also because much can be gained from taking it seriously Bringing together a diverse range of perspectives the essays reflect on the themes categories and concepts that should be part of such a conversation and show how talking about beauty engages important reflections on its ontology and what it involves values communities collectives and shared histories environment identity and political or legal mechanisms and institutions A must read for designers and theorists alike this volume allows readers to discover new strategies and concepts to foster the discussion of beauty in architecture
